Denganmal is a small village in western India with only 500 people. There is no water, so the only drinking water is from two wells at the foot of a hill. And it takes a long time to get the water back home. Because of the water, men usually marry a second or a third woman. Their work is to get water for the whole family. These women are called water wives.

Take Tuki, Sakharam's first wife, for example. Tuki has to look after the family when her husband goes to work. Tuki runs the house, cooks, cleans, and feeds the children. However, it can take up 12 hours to go to the well for the water and come home. Because of it, Tuki's husband marries the second wife, and she carries about 15 liters of water each time with two vessels on her head as others. Besides getting water, she also helps cook, cleans, and washes clothes and so on. In fact, water wives are illegal in India, but it's hard for the people there to change it now.

Malala Yousafzai is different from any other woman . In 2012, at the age of 15, she was shot in the head because she spoke up for girls in Pakistan and their right to go to school. Luckily, she didn't lose her life and got well. She became a voice for girls' education and then, in 2014, she also became the youngest winner of the Nobel Peace Prize. After that, she finally finished high school in the UK in 2017. The first time she used Twitter, she wrote: "I'm excited about my future, but I know that many girls around the world are out of school, and many never get the chance to finish their education." She is in the UK for her studies at Oxford. Her dream is to empower herself with education, and then it is her weapon. Now, she is working to make her dream come true.
