Grandpa was a wise man who did not talk much. What he said to me affected me a lot. "Lost time will never be found again," Grandpa always told me. He thought that I could learn better and faster than other boys and wanted me to spend more time learning than playing. For him, "learning" did not mean lessons taught in school but lessons learned in our lives.

He often took me to the orphanage to tell stories and sing songs to the children there. Sometimes I even helped them with their homework. I felt happy when I helped these young children. I asked Grandpa why he took me there. He told me that he grew up there before entering junior high. One day, my great-grandfather adopted him and took him home. After that, Grandpa forgot his friends there until he was much older. When he went back there to say thanks, he could not find anyone he knew.

"Learn to love, learn to help, and learn to thank people when you can." Those are the lessons my grandpa taught me. Though he has already passed away, he still lives in my heart.
