I have always felt compassionate for the kids I see at school walking all alone, for the ones that sit in the back of the room while everyone makes fun of them. But I never did anything about it. I guess I knew that someone else would. I did not take the time to really think about their pain. Then one day I thought, what if I did take a moment out of my busy life to simply say hello to someone without a friend or stop and chat with someone eating alone? And I did. I felt so good to brighten up others' lives. How did I know that? Because I remembered the day when a simple kind hello changed my life forever. Katie E. Houston
