四、閱讀測驗: 12%

(第 33~38 每題 2 分)

Josh is an English businessman. He moved to a foreign country to work. His friends want to know how he found Kuku to work in his garden. Kuku works well, but they don't speak the same language. This is what Josh told them.

I didn't find him; he found me. He came to my house soon after I moved in. He said, "You go 'work'?" I said, "Yes," and went with him because I thought this was a good chance to learn something about the small town and know more people. We walked to every place of the town. I have never walked so far in all my life.

When he said, "You go 'work'?" at first, I thought his English was good, but in fact, he knew only these words. He talked to everyone along the way, but I did not understand them at all. I could only say "Yes" and "OK" that afternoon. When I said so, he looked happy.

The next morning, I met the man in the house next to mine and I learned Kuku helped him weed the garden. When I got home, I found my garden clean and beautiful. Then I knew Kuku did not want a walk; he wanted work.

Since then, we have been good friends. He understands my money, and I understand his work. That's all the language between him and me.

Have you ever read a book called Guinness World Records? Are the records boring? Of course not. It is an amazing book that collects world records for everyday things. For example, the largest picnic blanket is 1,760 square meters. The heaviest lemon is 5.265 kilograms. The smallest working dog is 925 grams, which is only a little heavier than a dozen eggs. There are some funny records as well. A T-shirt was made to set a record. It's about a hundred times bigger than an ordinary T-shirt and took almost four weeks to make by hand. The most people for a basketball game is 108,713 for the NBA All-Star Game played in the USA.

The Guinness World Records is so interesting that it has always been the hit among the best-sellers. Over 100 million copies have been sold around the world. If you haven't taken a look at it, go get one and find out those surprising records!
