Blues and jazz are popular around the world. But where do they come from? People from Europe and America brought Africans to America to work for them for little money during the 1800s. These Africans brought their music to America. After the American Civil War (1861-1865), the Africans in the United States (U.S.) were free to work for themselves and also free to go to other places. From then on, more and more people heard their music, and they loved it! This music became blues and then jazz.

By the 1900s, blues and jazz played an important part in the world of music. The blues singers usually sing sadly because they lost someone or something in their lives, like a dear friend, or maybe money or a job. Living a hard life, they still played music in a fun way with only one or two instruments. Sometimes they just sang with no help of the instruments. For jazz, song writers and singers used more instruments. Jazz can be happier than blues and is often faster.

Blues and jazz singers are good at singing and playing the instruments to show their feelings. For the same song, the singer may sing it differently and the music usually changes with his or her feelings. And that is why people enjoy the music so much. Some of the popular blues and jazz songs also become classics and will last for a long long time.

However, he must go back to Afghanistan to save the child of his best friend, Hassan. The child is a slave to the Taliban. Amir must be brave when he goes back to his homeland.
